Manufacturing index hits seven-month low as caution persists. Factory purchasing managers wary of cost pressures despite easing oil shock. Factory activity was at its lowest in seven months in July, with confidence still subdued and export demand weak, while continued inventory drawdowns suggested manufacturers are cautious about the sustainability of a recovery in domestic demand and easing cost pressures. The Absa purchasing managers' index (PMI) - a measure of economic activity based on a survey conducted by the Bureau for Economic Research - declined further to 46.8 points in July from 47.3 in June, reaching its weakest level since December 2025. – Business Day
